You were helping your mom weaving baskets for selling from the age of 7 to support the family.

You were always jealous of your friends who had already been going to school for years.

Finally, at the age of 12, you and your siblings went to school together and started in first grade.

“You should take good care of your younger siblings at school.”

Your mother said.

After the first day of school, you went to your mom with new textbooks, asking for some leftover cloth to make a book cover.
